too, certainly more keen than that of 1857, and has left severer traces. As compared with 1817, 1866 was probably less severe, on the mercantile classes and upon the nation. In 1817, the revenue was tracere impaired, and the number of strict iv mercantile failures was much grenter, having reference to the magnitude of trade at the two corresponding periods. On the other hand, in 1866 the pressure of the hanking classes has been very much reater, and the peculiar credit intality the time has acted principally upon those whose trade and life is their credit, just as it did in 1825. -W quote green hid s at si those whose trade and lite is their creations as it did in 1825.
